The Three Little Owls

In a dark forest on a dark night, three little owls roosted on a branch. Above them, the stars twinkled and the moon was barely a sliver. The owls were waiting for their mother to return from her hunt and they were bored.

"I'm the best flyer in this forest," the first owl boasted, "Watch this!" He took a run along the branch, faster and faster, then leaped off the end. His huge wings flapped quickly as he swooped and dived like a fighter plane zooming through the night. Leaves fell from the trees as he rushed around at top speed. He came back into land, puffing his chest out importantly. "See?" he said. "Great," hooted the second owl, "but I'm the best singer in the forest. Listen." The second owl cleared her throat and belted out a fabulous tune. Her voice was clear and bold, like the ringing of church bells. Nearby, a flock of birds took flight, scattering into the inky sky. "Even the other birds are dancing for me!" the second owl laughed.

The third owl looked proudly at his brother and sister. "You're right. You are the best flyer and you are the best singer." He fell silent as his siblings settled back down on the branch with smug looks on their faces. The third owl racked his brain, but he couldn't think of what he was the best at. He was just happy to sit and listen to the sounds of the forest as the two of them showed off their skills.

A little while later, just as the three little owls' stomachs were starting to rumble, their mother swooped in and flopped down beside them on the branch. The first and second owls squabbled impatiently, pushing each other out of the way in their hurry to get to the lunch that their mother had brought. "Hunting was hard tonight!" their mother sighed. "Someone was scaring all the creatures away by rustling the leaves and flapping around." The first owl went red. The second owl giggled at him. "And then," their mother went on, "just when the creatures started to come out again, someone made this awful sound." The second owl went red too. Their mother looked at the third owl happily. "Thank you for waiting so patiently, dear." The third owl felt his heart glow with pride as his mother dropped her catch at his feet. "I'm the best at being patient. But I'm also best at sharing. Come on everyone, dig in!" he expressed kindly.

Rowing Boats

Wilf, Chip and Craige were going out on the river. Floppy went too. "We will take those rowing boats," said Dad. "Good plan," said Joy. They put the picnic things into the boats and got in. "Don't forget the coats," said Wilf. "can I row?" asked Chip. "Yes, I'll show," said Dad. "You have a go, Craige," said Dad. "With both hands." Let's stop here for the picnic," called Chip. "But not by those stones," said Dad. "We can unload the boats," said Chip. "Hand me the coats," said Craig. "These plums taste very good," said Craig. "Home-grown!" said Dad. "Don't be so annoying, Floppy," said Wilf.

"He wants his bone!" said Chip. Suddenly, there was a loud noise. "What's that?" asked Wilf. "I can hear voices," said Chip. The boys were trying to throw a rope over a big stone.
